Not illustrated. 1894 Excerpt: ...in the windows contained their names. A few years afterwards the fabric suffered sorely at the hands of the iconoclast Dowsing, as recorded in his journal of 1643 (Vol. vi., p. 248). The pillars dividing the nave from the aisles are very lofty, and embattled at the capitals. The string course beneath the six large clerestory windows is richly carved with heads and foliage, the whole being embattled at the top. The Font is Perpendicular, octagon in form, with good panelling. Eight bells hang in the tower, the oldest is dated 1579. There is a good brass eagle lectern, said to have been presented to the church by Queen Elizabeth, as was also the remarkable chalice. The choir stalls are deserving of attention, also fragments of an old coffin lid, which may have been brought from the Priory. The Cross and general form suggest that it formerly covered the grave of one of the Priors. On the floor of the nave is a stone thus inscribed:--Quondam Prior ordinis nostri, &c. Some have considered that this church was also a Priory Church of a different order to the one just visited. Possibly other coffins were brought to Clare Church for interment on the dissolution of the Priory. Notes on Clare Church, taken Nov. 9, 1805, by H. I. and D. E. Davy. The Chancel is separated from the Nave by a wooden screen, which also crosses the aisles. The pillars dividing the Nave from the aislea are very lofty, and clustered, 4 in each. The roofs are all leaded. In The Chancel. In the East Window are the following coats of Arms, and over them the sun and moon. 1. Vert, a Sal tire, or.
