Not illustrated. 1880 edition. Excerpt: ...with his friends, and in composing verses. During this time, says Xenophon, he lived before the eyes of all his friends in the same manner as in former days; but now his past life was most admired on account of his present calmness and cheerfulness of mind. And I thought that he only left this world under the protection of the Gods, who destined him to a more than mortal felicity in the next. He then details the conversation on the immortality of the soul; after which, he narrates the close of that glorious life in language worthy of it. Even in the English version of Taylor the beauty of the narrative stands manifestly out. _ When he had thus spoke, he rose, and went into a room, that he might wash himself, and Grito followed him: but he ordered us to wait for him. We waited, therefore, accordingly, discoursing over, and reviewing among ourselves, what had been said, and sometimes speaking about his death, how great a calamity it would be to us; and sincerely thinking that we, like those who are deprived of their father, should pass the rest of our life in the...
