Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: ... of the work of the Institute for the third period of five years, 1913-1917, in my last report (bulletin VIII, 1917, p. 24)71 stated: It is gratifying to see that we have made steady progress, and the fiscal year just concluded is the best in our history. We have largely overcome by the growth of membership in the United States the losses in our Department in Canada incident to three years participation in the World War. The table there presented showed that in the United States the net increase in members for the five-year period was 364, and in receipts from membership fees, $3,232.47. Current receipts regularly exceeded current expenditures, and only during the last fiscal year was there a trifling deficit of $224.87 see Presidents Report, BulleTin VIII (1917), p. 12. It is a source of gratification that during the whole period under consideration, the membership and receipts of the Institute have been trebled and that in spite of recent world conditions we have more than held our own. But this is only one aspect of the growth of the Institute. In 1906 our Act of Incorporation was granted by Congress, which made us truly a national body with headquarters at the National Capital, and to this our rapid expansion was largely due. In 1908 the American School in Santa Fe was organized, and its record of achievement was emphasized at its tenth anniversary celebration. The School has also contributed largely to the growth of the Institute in membership and influence. Our Lecture System also kept pace with the growth of the societies until, from small beginnings, we had four lecture circuits in the Eastern, Middle and Western States and Canada respectively, with about twenty lecturers each year and the total of about 200 lectures in the course of t...
